

WITHDRAW AID TO LET HAUPTMANN TELL TRUE STORY

Mrs. Evalyn Walsh McLean
Had Engaged Services of Leibowitz

HE MAY TALK YET Says Hauptmann May Break Down in Next Two or Three Days

By International News Service
WASHINGTON, Feb. 20—Puzzled by Bruno Richard Hauptmann's refusal "to tell what he knows," Mrs. Evalyn Walsh McLean, prominent socialite, today withdrew her private efforts to persuade the prisoner to name his accomplices before he dies in the electric chair.

It was Mrs. McLean who engaged Samuel Leibowitz, a noted attorney, to interview Hauptmann and ask him to name the persons who helped him kidnap the Lindbergh baby. She said she dropped interest in the case Saturday, after Leibowitz gained nothing from his first interview.

"Why doesn't the fool man talk," she said. "There is nothing more I could do. I thought this was a chance to get at the truth. He may break down in the next two or three days, you know."

Leibowitz was told yesterday that he could see Hauptmann in the death house once more to determine whether he could force Bruno Richard Hauptmann to tell the "full truth" in the Lindbergh baby murder. If he

Discontinue Bus Service Over State Road Area

Croydon residents are almost isolated due to the condition of State Road about which it is claimed the State Highway Department does nothing.

Due to the condition of State Road it became necessary yesterday for the Neibauer Bus Company to cease operating buses over State Road, and the company re-routed their buses over the Bristol Pike from Croydon to Bristol. The last bus to travel through the mud, slush, and ice, and to bump over the holes in State Road was Tuesday night.

The Neibauer Company stated that it became absolutely necessary for them to re-route their buses. The water which flooded State Road turned to ice with the sudden drop in temperature. The roadway is now just a mass of hard frozen chunks of ice, deep ruts and is almost impassable.

The State Highway Department has been appealed to but without result.

WIFE NUMBER 1 CLAIMS SHE DIDN'T LOSE MUCH

But Second Spouse Didn't
Wish to See James Bowman
Punished for Bigamy

GETS 3 TO 24 MONTHS

DOYLESTOWN, Feb. 20—For James B. Bowman, young Philadelphia, who was convicted by a jury on a bigamy charge on Tuesday afternoon, it wasn't a case of being between the devil and the deep blue sea, but between Polish wife No. 1 and Italian wife No. 2, both of whom were in court.

Bowman, who was convicted, offered no defense. He was sentenced by Judge Calvin S. Boyer to serve not less than three months nor more than two years in the County Prison.

To determine the lay of the land, Judge Boyer asked Wife No. 1, Rose A. Bowman, attractive and smartly garbed brunette, how she felt toward her defendant-husband. "I don't feel that I've lost very much," she snapped, her eyes flashing.

Wife No. 2, the mother of a child born during the bigamous marriage, was decidedly more affectionate. She doesn't wish him punished.

Wife No. 1, the first witness, testified that she married the defendant November 24, 1930, in an Episcopal church in Philadelphia. She exhibited a copy of their certificate of marriage.

Justice of the Peace James Laughlin, the second witness, testified that he united the defendant and Anne de Pinta in marriage September 7, 1935.

The Commonwealth, pointed out Assistant District Attorney Edward G. Biester, had made out its case.

Upon the suggestion of defense counsel, Webster S. Achey, the defendant did not take the stand. He had no defense.

Judge Boyer directed foreman of the jury, Aaron Stever, to ascertain the verdict, if possible, without leaving the room. Each juror nodded and said guilty and the verdict was rendered.

To learn about the extenuating circumstances, Judge Boyer permitted the defendant to take the stand before being sentenced and tell his version and how it felt to have two wives.

Bowman, blonde, testified that he lived with Wife No. 1 until August 24, 1934. He said she came home drunk with her dress on wrong-side out and was unfaithful. So one day he left a hastily scrawled note, which was exhibited by Wife No. 1, saying, "So long."

"OUR CONSTITUTION"

By BAINBRIDGE COLBY
Former Secretary of State
In an Address Before the Eleventh Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense, Held in Washington, D. C.

Personally, I think the Socialists have come pretty near accomplishing precisely what for years, in their textbooks and propaganda, they have urged their followers to attempt, namely, the capture of one of the established parties and the conversion of it to Socialist use and Socialist purposes.

This is a theorem preached by both the Socialist and Communist Parties.

I will not speak of the Communists who hold many influential positions in the Administration. It seems less alarmist, with perhaps some of the merit of understatement, to mention only the Socialists.

For decades these parties have been like bands of conspirators operating hopelessly against the outnumbering mass of our population.

Despite hostility to democracy in principle and believing its strength in the United States an obstacle to the establishment of their theories, THEY HAVE LONG PLOTTED HOW THEY MIGHT UNDERMINE AND OVERTHROW BOTH OUR CONSTITUTION AND OUR GOVERNMENT.

Overwhelmingly beaten in every election, they have come to the conclusion that their theories cannot win in open political contest. Tired of their never interrupted failure, depressed by their inconsiderable vote, they adopted the new technique, whose results we see in the present trends in Washington.

UNABLE TO BUILD A PARTY, THEY PROCEEDED TO CAPTURE A PARTY ALREADY BUILT.

Unable to obtain popular support for their proposals to change American life and to overthrow American institutions, they have become frank NULLIFICATIONISTS.

Eating their way into the Democratic party, imposing themselves upon credulous and weak personalities, edging themselves into key positions, they have kept constantly before them the Socialist objectives—to strike down American individualism, initiative, self reliance and independence, and to substitute dependence upon the State, submission to a centralized authority, abandonment of ambition for individual careers, regimentation and, in short, the burial of the American conception of life.

This is the explanation of the stereotyped New Deal preface to all their legislation. Their rickety bills all begin with a recital of the extraordinary "emergency," on which they relied to pull them through the illegalities on which they were intent.

By dilating on the "emergency" and the asserted collapse of our civilization, the Socialists in the Administration felt they were laying a foundation for their plea that we discard our form of government and scrap the Constitution.

Here was a new tactic in nullification of the Constitution. The old Constitution, which has bridged the most violent social and economic changes ever known since the world began; which has carried us safely through five wars and their attendant upheavals and resulting dislocations, was to be scrapped because of its inadequacy to cope with an "emergency." ALREADY HEALING THROUGH THE OPERATION OF NORMAL ECONOMIC FORCES.

Unprecedented grants of power were coaxed from the people's representatives on the plea of "emergency" and on the promise that they would be restored when the emergency had passed. Their clear unconstitutionality was tolerantly viewed and not insisted upon on the assumption that such powers were to be of short duration.

But now again, nullification, which I am tracing in its many displays, showed itself again.

The emergency powers were retained regardless of the duration of the emergency, and even after the emergency had ceased.

Not only were they retained, but enlarged and built, as supposed, permanently into our governmental fabric. Their constitutional weakness was to be bolstered by new and faithless interpretations of the Constitution.

The Supreme Court was either to be packed, or vacancies filled as they occurred by men subservient to New Deal Socialist aims.

And thus was nullification to be pushed further and further, with the aid of so-called "judicial interpretation," emasculating the Constitution and substituting for its plain intent theories of the law which bore the Socialist twist.

SCOUTS READY TO AID IN RIVER EMERGENCY

Mobilization Will Be Carried
On by William F.
Livermore

46 VOLUNTEER SERVICES

Forty-six men raised their hands immediately ready to give service at first-aid stations if there should be a rise along the Delaware River from ice jams if the American Red Cross should need them. Erle Jackson, director of first-aid and life-saving of the southeastern Chapter of the American Red Cross, thanked the men for their response, and said that if they were needed the Red Cross headquarters would mobilize them through Scout Executive William F. Livermore. The first-aid experts will be supplemented by any emergency by hundreds of lovers, Seascouts, and Scouts having a general knowledge of first aid. Bucks County Council is ready for service.

The second session of the Red Cross Course being conducted by Mr. Jackson was held for the second time at the Doylestown American Legion home. Chairman of the Health and Safety Committee William Livezey, Gilford, presided. Attendance, and equipment were the responsibilities of Field Commissioner of Health and Safety George E. Dorfner, Doylestown. Review of previous work, bandaging, resuscitation, two questionnaires, and minor first-aid treatment were the lectures and demonstrations by Mr. Jackson.

Chiefs "extraordinary" Neighborhood Commissioner A. B. Stiles, and William Amick with the help of the Monument Restaurant were able to keep the "inner man" more than full for all of the men. They left for home "stuffed to overflowing." Helpful service in the kitchen was done by Gil Carlin, Dave Neill, William and John Adams, Lew Petheroff, Jack and Charlie Burgess, Hip Stockham, George Dorfner, and Joe Zalot. Songs during the meal were led by Bill Schofield, Walt Ruthford, and Howard Boehret. The new rest song leadership" or "arm chair songleading" was dramatized by Skipper Kemmerer of Sellersville.

Four new men were registered by the Course Registrar Neighborhood Commissioner Clarence F. Hawk, Doylestown. They were John and William Adams, of Riegelsville, and two of the Field Commissioners of Training, Walter Ruthford, Doylestown, and William L. Schofield, Morrisville.

"Old Timers" returning for the second week-end session were: Harry A. Behm, George Bloch, Joseph Kish, and Raymond Vickers, of Andalusia.

"Rose of the Rancho" Has An Operetta-Type Score

"Rose of the Rancho," Paramount's new musical romance which comes to the Grand Theatre Thursday and Friday, boasts of the first original operetta-type score ever written for the screen. And the picture has more new songs than any other film ever made—eleven, plus four Spanish dances.

"Rose of the Rancho" marks the screen debut of Gladys Swarthout, beautiful Metropolitan opera star, and of the new comedy team of Willie Howard and Herb Williams.

Miss Swarthout sings five songs while John Boles, who plays opposite her, has three, and they sing a duet together. Willie Howard has two songs.

Miss Swarthout departs for the first time from her accustomed operatic arias and sings frankly "popular" numbers in at least two instances. Her other songs are of the operetta type. Her two popular melodies are "Thunder Over Paradise" and "Don't Tell a Secret to a Rose."

BAKE SALE SATURDAY

Causing Argument

Rome, Feb. 20—Impending ratification of the Franco-Soviet mutual aid pact today appeared to be driving central and eastern Europe into an argument over the threat of Bolshevism.

It is unmistakable that Poland is being brought into a line-up with Italy, Germany and Austria, diplomatic circles pointed out, and formation of such a program would present a front against Red influences in middle Europe.

Italy, it was learned, fears Bolshevism might spread, and all indications were that Premier Mussolini and Chancellor Hitler are preparing to meet this threat.

It was also pointed out Italy and Germany might work together as a counter foil to the League of Nations, toward Mussolini's Ethiopian campaign and as a means of breaking down the "iron reign."

Coal Industry Faces Crisis

New York, Feb. 20—The anthracite industry faces a crisis, and it is dependent upon reductions of cost that will send back business.

This opinion was contained in a statement made public here today, following the final meeting of the operators' negotiating committee at the anthracite institute.

James H. Pierce, of Scranton, Pa., speaking for the committee, said the industry has shown a loss of $31,000,000 in the three years from 1932 to 1935.

Business declined from an average of 78,000,000 tons to 47,250,035, he said, and employment has declined from the 1926 peak of 168,000 to about 106,000 now.

The operators contend that rates average about 79c, and are far above the average of 56c for all industries.

Shorter hours, they contend, would increase cost, although give more employment.

Pierce indicated the operators would oppose a union demand for equalization of work to meet the "bootleggers" problems.

THRILLING ARCTIC EXPERIENCES TOLD THE FATHERS' ASS'N

Men Give Rapt Attention

Officer

OLIVER C. RIGGS

Tells of Trip to Polar Region
On "Nautilus," Speaks of Crilly

At the regular monthly meeting of the Fathers' Association of the Bristol public schools held last evening in the high school auditorium, and before an audience that made up in rapt interest what it may have lacked in numbers because of the severe weather, Oliver C. Riggs, former Reserve Officer of the United States Navy, related one thrilling story after another regarding his experiences on the Arctic submarine "Nautilus," the famous undersea craft of the Sir Hubert Wilkins Expedition.

Officer Riggs, one of a crew of 23 selected from more than 2,000 applicants, was First Assistant Engineer of the expedition. With him, as Chief Diver, was Frank Crilly, a native of Bristol, who seems to have gone in for diving when he was still a small boy, submerging in the Delaware River with a lead can as his diver's helmet. Although there were only 23 men in the crew, they totaled 117 years of submarine experience. Most of them were less than 35 years of age.

The ship itself, one of the O-type submarines built toward the close of the World War, was reconstructed and fitted with equipment designed to meet anticipated conditions in the Arctic. Its bow was equipped with a hydraulic plunger shaft to protect the craft against collision with undersurface ice. By means of a 5,500 candle-power light in its bow, it was possible to distinguish objects ahead for a distance of 35 feet. Somewhat to the rear of the forward pressure compartments there was installed a large, 28-inch tubular drill, capable of boring a hole of that diameter through a layer of ice 14 feet thick. At the point where the conning tower of the submarine had been, a hollow ice drill was built, smaller in diameter but capable of drilling through 140 feet of ice by the use of sections. A similar hollow drill was installed at the stern end of the engine room. By means of these two drills it was always possible to secure necessary ventilation, particularly when the batteries furnishing power to run the submarine had to be recharged. Over the pressure deck a so-called "sided deck," equipped with runners and a trolley arm, was built. This was designed to protect the craft against damage by contact with the underside of the ice layer. More than

Near-Zero Weather Still Here; Guard Phone Cables

Near-zero temperatures continue, with no immediate promise of relief from the Arctic chill. The mercury slowly descended during the night, moving from 14 degrees to two degrees above zero, between the hours of six p. m. and 6.30 a. m. Solid ice remains underfoot, covering highways, side-walks and roadways, making motor and foot travel difficult.

Stating the corporation was fearful that the high water may carry away the telephone cables on the Calhoun street bridge, representatives from the A. T. & T. Co., of Pennsylvania, asked Morrisville borough council for permission to run an alternate line of not more than three cables along the canal from Trenton avenue to Palmer street and then down Delmore avenue to Bridge street where the wires would be placed in the conduits underground and run back to Trenton, N. J., and north to the Trenton side of the Calhoun street bridge. The request was granted.

The officials pointed out that in case anything occurred to the cables on the bridge, which carries the wires between New York, Philadelphia and the South, this alternate line could be connected immediately and there would be little interruption in the service.

Weather Cuts Attendance At Horticultural Session

TREVOSE, Feb. 20—The usual 300 to 400 attendance number of Trevese Horticultural Society was cut to 16, Tuesday evening, owing to the nasty weather. This number included the two guest speakers, William O. Hird, Burholme, who gave a talk on new annuals and perennials; and Mrs. Margaret Gruenbaum, Olney, who spoke of begonias and their care.

Phillip Moore, Abington, a member of the new species committee, gave an interesting talk on new plant species. He also had with him some very unusual hot house plants which he said can also be used as house plants.

Because of the very small attendance one of the features at these meetings, the awarding of attendance prizes, was not carried out.

The next meeting will take place on Tuesday evening, March 15th.

VALUE OF TRAINED POLICE

Distinguished judges, district attorneys, police chiefs, educators and leading citizens of five counties in Eastern Pennsylvania are evidently convinced that police officers should be offered the opportunities to become thoroughly familiar with modern scientific police methods and keep up with the progress of the times and that something should be done about it. "Modern Law Enforcement Requires Well Trained Police," is the motto of the new Police School of Eastern Penna. Present day conditions require very special knowledge and training in the latest and approved methods of preventing crime, protecting persons and property, apprehending the guilty, and securing all the evidence for conviction. The Police School of Eastern Pennsylvania offers these opportunities and advantages.

The new Police School is a development of the former Delaware County Police School. According to the Director, Dr. J. A. Detlefsen, several police departments in other counties applied for permission to enter their officers two years ago. It became apparent that a centrally located school would make the opportunities available to men from several counties. Therefore, representatives from all the suburban counties around Philadelphia cooperated and formed the larger school.

Bucks County is represented on the Advisory Board by President Judge Hon. Hiram O. Keller. Advisors at large are Major Lynn G. Adams, Superintendent of State Police, Mr. J. Paul Brown, Councilman in Swarthmore, Thomas A. Meryweather, Secretary of the Crime Prevention Bureau, Capt. Wilson C. Price, Superintendent State Highway Patrol, and the Very Rev. F. V. Standford, O. S. A., President of Villanova College.

The policies of the school are directed by an executive committee on which W. C. Hobensack, Doylestown, and Anthony Russo, Bristol, represent Bucks County.

The officers spend ten to 12 hours on the pistol range, and records of last year showed an improvement of 49 per cent after receiving expert instruction. First aid, preservation of physical fitness, fingerprinting, methods of obtaining latent and hidden evidence, legal medicine, criminal psychology, and crime prevention are among other subjects presented for rounding out a police officer's education, training and viewpoint. Lectures are also given on how to prepare evidence for court, and the details of court procedure and prosecution. Common crimes and offenses are discussed by those particularly expert in handling problems of larceny, burglary, stick-ups, vagrancy, and the like. The whole course requires about 50 hours of instruction and begins on Thursday, March 5th. Sessions are held during the late afternoon, from 4:00 to 6:20 p. m., every Tuesday and Thursday thereafter during March, April and May.

Coal operators have been warned to establish a price scale by the bituminous coal commission. The weather may do it for them.

The supreme court has hired a press relations man—a pleasant post, perhaps, but handling publicity for Sally Rand is still tops among sinecures.

"DAUGHTERS OF VENUS"

by ROBERT TERRY SHANNON

SYNOPSIS

In the dining room of a Los Angeles hotel, Juliet Rankin is approached by Denton Terhune, well known San Francisco lawyer. Attracted by Juliet's beauty and wit, he asks if he might chat with her. During their conversation, Terhune tells Juliet that she is searching for something more than love and marriage—"a breathless something you cannot name." Terhune introduces Mary to Madame Hubert, wealthy beauty expert, whom he describes as the oddest and most interesting woman in Los Angeles, and her handsome, young manager, Thomas O'Hara.

CHAPTER II

Juliet realized that in a minute or two more she would see the last of this comradely middle-aged man who had drifted so informally into this her first evening out here.

She had always heard the West was friendlier and franker than the East. It was true.

Denton Terhune—obviously a man of character—had revealed himself so naturally to her that she seemed like an old friend—in less than an hour.

Yet Juliet herself had told him scarcely more than her name.

He had taken her at face value as a worthwhile person and had done a little philosophical guessing about her future. No attempt to date her up. It wouldn't be difficult, Juliet decided, to get along in a town like this. But the local amiability that Juliet sensed certainly was not operating at Madame Hubert's table.

O'Hara had ceased growling and had barricaded himself behind a stony silence while the best little woman kept up a low and mournful wailing.

"I'll absolutely not have Mrs. Gottlieb removed to the hospital!" she was insisting for the hundredth time. Her voice was corroded with the rust of a French accent, a relic of her legendary youth in Paris.

"If she dies on our hands—we must risk that. You're a fool, O'Hara. Suppose we go now to her husband with a confession—what then? We stir up alarm, excitement. He prepares a damage suit. It's inviting calamity. Perhaps—immediately—we are arrested!"

O'Hara granted, "Oh, Mrs. Gottlieb'll die, all right. Probably kicking off tonight while we sit here."

Madame Hubert's brisk black eyes fixed themselves upon a short rotund man whose face consisted principally of a snarl, but wandering nose. His name was Herman Gottlieb and he was, at the moment, laboriously fidgeting his stenographer, a curving brunette with a painted rosebud mouth.

"Look at him!" rasped Madame Hubert. "Men! His poor wife trying to hold a husband like a fool!" Her eyes snapped back to O'Hara as though she blamed him for the whole thing.

"Why didn't someone find out her heart was weak before Von Guerdon gave her ether?" Madame Hubert consumed a spoonful of sherbet. "Oh well, maybe she'll recover after all."

"Don't kid yourself," snickered O'Hara. "She's going to die and when she does it's goodbye to reputation and business. Customers will dodge the Institute like it was a pest house. Malpractice! Man-slaughter! I can see the headlines. For the last time—I tell you I'm going to spring the bad news on Gottlieb and make him take his wife home before she dies. We can threaten to expose him as a philanthropist unless he gives us a break. But we've got to hurry."

There was a trace of bluster in O'Hara's words but Madame Hubert's pointed chin stubbornly closed above her over-hanging nose, riving her the expression of a determined witch.

"No, no, no!" It was as though a crow had cawed thrice.

Before O'Hara could reply, which he had no intention of doing, they were aware of Denton Terhune, accompanied by Juliet, standing over them.

Five minutes later Terhune had gone, but Juliet remained and was seated between Madame Hubert, who welcomed her presence, and the general manager, who distinctly did not.

The Madame, her eyes flashing, had discovered a professional job in the face and perfect figure of Juliet. The withered creature was an artist, an appreciator of subtle and interesting beauty. Juliet, in an instant, fulfilled her exacting standards as did no other woman who ever had come before those hard and shrewd little eyes.

It would be honest to say, were such a thing possible, that Madame Hubert's heart warmed and expanded at the sight of Juliet's harmonic symmetry.

One of her hands, brown as a claw, slipped across the table and rested lightly on the back of Juliet's wrist.

"My dear," said Madame Hubert, "I can find a use for you. How would you like to work with me?"

Juliet smiled. "I never wanted particularly to be a manicurist."

"I don't mean anything like that," returned Madame Hubert seriously. "I can use you in lots of ways—important ways. Is it not so, O'Hara?"

A sullen glow burned in O'Hara's eyes. For no reason that Juliet could discern, the man seemed to dislike her instantly and intensely.

This was queer, too, because Juliet, quietly and mysteriously, was beginning to feel unaccountable tremors of attraction toward him.

"I'm fed up," O'Hara said impatiently. "We've got enough trouble on hand without any more complications. I don't want or need Miss Rankin in our organization and I am not going to hire her! I'm sorry—nothing personal—but that's the way I feel."

Juliet started to laugh but suddenly a stinging heat got into her cheeks. Something in O'Hara's personality kept knocking at the back of her mind, worrying her. Somewhere in the depth of her being a metallic and decisive mechanism clicked into place.

"I'm sorry Mr. O'Hara feels that way about me," she said, turning her head completely away from him—ignoring him—and smiling sweetly at Madame Hubert. "I'll be awfully glad to join your organization, Madame!"

O'Hara pushed back his chair and got to his feet rudely. It was to be a battle between the Madame and O'Hara. He was hard but she was harder. Juliet noticed a wart on the woman's face, a brownish and mottled countenance, dry like an autumn leaf. The old black eyes glistened but there was never the ghost in them of compromise or surrender.

"Don't be a fool, O'Hara," said Madame Hubert icily. "You'll regret it."

There was the pallor of anger under O'Hara's fine clear skin. He did not deign to look at Juliet.

"We're in a spot and I can't get things straightened up if I am to be interfered with," he said in a compressed voice. "After all the hard work I've done to build up the business you're asking me to stand by and see it go smash like a toy balloon because of your stupidity."

He was about to leave abruptly when Madame Hubert's hand touched his sleeve and skittered up like a tiny dun-colored squirrel.

"Bébé, Monseur Bébé!" crooned Madame Hubert with a new note of wheedle. "If he can't have his own little way, he won't play, eh? He will abandon the poor old woman to her fate—to say nothing of his impoliteness to the young lady."

Her words made O'Hara feel ridiculous and his handsome face showed it. For an instant he stood irresolutely and in that instant he was lost, for Madame Hubert seized his sleeve and pulled him back into his chair.

"These temperamental people!" she exclaimed to Juliet. O'Hara's half business man—the other half in pure artist.

Juliet smiled subtly. "I understand perfectly. A man in the beauty business—naturally!"

For O'Hara it was a drop of acid on the raw and his face darkened.

"Oh, he's a nice enough animal!" said Madame Hubert complacently, now that O'Hara was again seated.

"I'd be lost without him. Handling the beauty work—the women—is not in his department. From a business standpoint we're an industrial concern just like a factory where they make shoes or automobiles or straw hats. But I'm the stupid one—so he says tonight. I who conceived the whole institute! Do you wonder I called him an animal?"

"Is he?" asked Juliet in amazement and amusement.

"Observe for yourself!" cried Madame Hubert. "This is a moment historic, yet he seizes the opportunity to stir a quarrel."

"Well, it's historic all right," growled O'Hara. "Wait till Mrs. Gottlieb dies. The grand collapse of the famous Madame Hubert! Next week it will be the notorious Madame Hubert!"

The Madame affected not to hear him and addressed herself directly to Juliet.

"The occasion is historic because you and I have met here at this little table, my dear. You—the most beautiful woman in Los Angeles and I—the most ugly. It's superb—it's dramatic—it's sheer collision! Think what Balzac would have made of it—yet this man here, this O'Hara with the soul of a tenth-rate pawnbroker, sits and screams about filthy dollars and dimes!" He is revolting—fough, fough!"

O'Hara glared at his employer, but remotely some light was beginning to twinkle in his eyes.

"Only a malicious and wicked woman would say 'fough,' 'fough' like you do!" he declared openly. "You know you're a sinful old miser and all this talk about drama and moments historic is the worst kind of bunk! If the headwaiter didn't watch you'd carry off my wares."

These startling insults rattled harmlessly off Madame Hubert who lowered her voice and spoke confidentially to Juliet.

"Regard nothing he says as serious. For years he represented an American Company in China until the typhus got him. He cannot go back because a second attack is fatal. The fever—you know—and he tapped her temple significantly with a skinny finger and rolled her eyes.

What, in heaven's name, Juliet wondered, kind of people were these? Everything about them was touched with a childish madness.

It was fantastic that between them somehow they had built up a great business. Yet there was no question as to that fact. Denton Terhune had vouched for it and Madame Hubert's diamond dog-collar alone was worth a fortune.

But any enterprise managed by these two, Juliet decided, would unquestionably be a continuous combat, and any association with O'Hara was bound to be disagreeable. Juliet could see that already.

It occurred to her that possibly he resented her because—this as only a guess—she was swindling Madame Hubert. O'Hara drank a glass of water and looked Juliet straight in the eye.

"Take my advice and keep out of it," he said decisively. "I don't like you and you don't like me—we would never get on together. You would only be in the way and there is no future with us anyhow!"

Are you a STRANGER in your own home?

IT'S A FUNNY THING—but most people don't half see their own homes. We pass by both the fine points and the places that need fixing, without a glance, without a thought.

Yes, we all do this—until some day we decide to look around and really discover the place we live in. . . . Let's start with the living-room. That couch seat—how dingy and dull it looks. And there's a rough place where the cat sharpens his claws. The little rug in the hall is ragged and frayed. (Why, that's a disgrace!) And that table top certainly must be done over. The mantel looks positively bare, since Ted broke that lovely green vase. And all those magazines and papers—what we need is a good-looking stand to hold them.

You see the point. Lots of little things need doing. And it doesn't take lots of money to do them, one at a time. . . . Just make a list of what's needed and then keep watching the advertisements in this newspaper for good buys at low prices. Now's a fine time to find all sorts of good things for the house (February for furniture!), things you've been needing a long time, maybe, things you can have now without spending too much.

Hovatter Acquitted; County To Pay Costs

chair and threw into the waste basket an enormous wad of chewing gum.

The trial proceeded with the Bristol truck driver, who is employed by the Safety Laundry Company of that place, testifying that he had only four short beers in two hours before he was arrested by Corporal R. D. Evans, of the Oxford Valley State Highway Patrol sub-station, November 17, 1935, following a collision with John Bodenschatz, of Parkland, on the County Line Road, near Langhorne.

Hovatter was acquitted by a jury which directed that the costs be placed in county.

The first witness to take the stand was Bodenschatz, who testified that he, his wife and child were driving along the highway when they were sideswiped by a car driven by the defendant. During an argument concerning the damages to the cars, Mrs. Bodenschatz called up the State Highway Patrol.

Arriving at the scene of the accident, Corporal Evans arrested Hovatter after he detected alcohol on his breath, saw him stagger and noticed that his eyes were bloodshot.

The defendant was pronounced under the influence of intoxicating liquor after being examined by Dr. Henry Lovett, Langhorne physician, who described his gait as staggering, his coordination poor and his station poor.

Hovatter, in explanation of his carriage and gait, testified that he had at one time both legs broken, one of them badly smashed in 1924 from the knee to the ankle, and that many people stated he staggered when he was sober.

He denied that he was under the influence of liquor or that he felt the effects of the four beers which he had taken.

The defendant, who has been a resident of Edgely for 18 months, has been employed by the Bristol Laundry for about 19 months.

As "character" witnesses, County

Detective Russo and Constable Charles Alta testified that the defendant bore a good reputation for sobriety.

When Carver J. Pusey, of Wrightstown, artist, was unable to appear in court because of the drifted condition of the road, Howard I. James and Lawrence A. Monroe, counsel for the defendant, and Assistant District Attorney Edward G. Blester, both agreed the trial could continue with eleven jurors.

Resuming the trial, Clarence Stemme, Parkland Inn man, testified the defendant was not under the influence of intoxicating liquor. "I never serve a man when he's under the influence of drink. Hovatter may have had 3 or 4 drinks of beer."

"For the two hours the defendant was at my place he and I played darts together. It was a rainy night and there weren't more than 15 people in my place at one time."

Mrs. Catherine Stemme, wife of the Parkland man, testified she served the defendant four short beers. "He did not obtain any more because I served all the beer to the patrons."

"The defendant refused two other drinks, one of which was his own treat. He was not under the influence of liquor when he left but Elmer has a terribly funny walk. He always talks fast."

William Bossler, a guest at the inn, testified that he saw the defendant about ten minutes that evening. "Hovatter did not drink while I was there and was not drunk when I left."

Miss Margaret Taylor, Parkland, testified that she saw Hovatter at her home Saturday night soon after 11 o'clock when he delivered a package to her sister. "I went out to the car and sat in it with him for a little while. He was sober."

William Taylor, gas station proprietor, as a character witness testified the defendant bore a good reputation.

Others were: John Thayer, Parkland Heights; John T. Clancey, Parkland, a chemist now employed by a WPA project; all of whom testified favorably.

Luckies are less acid. One of the chief contributions of the Research Department in the development of A LIGHT SMOKE is the private Lucky Strike process, "IT'S TOASTED."

This preheating process at higher temperatures consists of four main stages, which involve carefully controlled temperature gradations. Quantities of undesirable constituents are removed. In effect, then, this method of preheating at higher temperatures constitutes a completion or fulfillment of the curing and aging processes.

Luckies are less acid

Recent chemical tests show that other popular brands have an excess of acidity over Lucky Strike of from 53% to 100%.

I found a new place to hang my hat, here's the key," and that was that. But he added insult to injury when he took up with Miss dePinto, one of his first wife's best friends and who is employed in the same mill. In fact, he met her through Wife No. 1.

Wife No. 2, who gave birth to a child December 24, heard her defendant-husband say he "felt no affection" for his first wife but was very happy with his present wife. Wife No. 2 smiled.

To climax his testimony, Bowman related that he had not told Wife No. 2 he was married when he courted her nor that he had been married—and divorced—when he was "just a kid" in North Carolina at the age of 17.

It was all rather unconventional with Wife No. 2 knowing that the defendant and Wife No. 1 had been living together for several years, but not knowing they were married.

Twenty-three out of the 26 of his years, John Francis, yardley bleachery employe, worked in the bleaching, finishing and dyeing plant in that borough, and on Tuesday afternoon he was sentenced by Judge Calvin S. Boyer to pay the costs of prosecution, serve not less than three months nor more than five years in the County Prison after pleading guilty to felonious entry.

In a confession, read by Superintendent John F. McCarthy, it was disclosed that the defendant had stolen materials, such as rayon twill, from the plant and sold them in Trenton, N. J., amounting to $18.

When apprehended, materials were found in his home in the bureau drawers upstairs, Constable Thomas South testified: "between eight and ten yards of rayon."

"I can't see much excuse for stealing to make money," the Court told Francis. "You didn't earn much, but you wasted what you did earn on getting drunk. If you had made the best of your earnings, the Court would be inclined to be more considerate."

"It isn't a matter of punishment, but this aggravated system of stealing must be stopped. I could send you to the penitentiary for ten years. The law will not tolerate crimes as serious as this and I must make an example of you," said Judge Boyer.

While her husband was being sentenced Mrs. Francis, who wept bitterly and was openly defiant by shouting that he did it to get bread for his starving children, was told to be quiet. "Apparently you don't have much sense or you could see why your husband was sentenced. Apparently you don't help him very much," Judge Boyer said turning his remarks on the defendant's wife.

Francis, who earned $14.60 a week, explained to the Court that he also supported a brother-in-law who is ill. He confessed to taking materials from the plant during working hours by hiding them in his shirt.

Although he didn't have anything on him when apprehended in the mill about 6 o'clock in the morning on December 14, testimony revealed that he had opened a window and would have thrown his loot outside.

Superintendent John F. McCarthy, the first witness, estimated that losses may amount to $85, the largest individual theft being between 50 and 600 yards, for which settlements have not been reached in every case.

The losses were heaviest in December, October, November and December. Constable South, the second witness, testified that Francis had been drinking too much recently and had warned him about becoming intoxicated.

Francis electrified the Court as well as the plant superintendent when he stated that thirty per cent of the employes took materials home. "Look for yourself on the washlines some Monday morning," he said.

He was caught in the plant about 6 o'clock one morning by a special detail of guards. Francis no doubt believed that the night watchman had gone off duty and that there was no one in the mill.

After being watched and caught for suspicious behavior by Superintendent McCarthy, the defendant stated he merely wanted rags to dry his hands with because he was going trapping.

Dr. O. C. Engle was a character witness for the defendant who described him as the best of his crowd.

Henry Ziegler, Jr. of Milford Square, was acquitted by a jury and the costs in the case were placed on the county.

Wilmer H. Fluck, Quakertown butcher, went on trial before Judge Keller on a charge of aggravated assault and battery by automobile and assault and battery by automobile.

Richard Stoneback, 15, of Quakertown, testified that he was injured on the night of November 7, 1935, when he was knocked off a bicycle by a car driven by Fluck. Stoneback testified that he was riding on the frame of a bicycle that was being propelled by Richard Long, 16, of Quakertown. The witness said that he received a broken leg and a fractured skull and remembers very little about the accident. He did not regain consciousness until five days later in a Quakertown hospital.

Richard Long, who was also injured in the accident, testified that he was thrown off the bicycle with Stoneback, and was injured. He described the accident and said that Fluck's car passed by another car coming toward his bicycle and struck the bicycle.

John Smoll, 15, of Quakertown, who was riding on a second bicycle, testified that his bicycle, too, was hit by Fluck's car, and that he was thrown off. Earl Egner, 15, of Quakertown, was riding on Smoll's bicycle with Smoll, and was also injured.

Charged with carrying concealed deadly weapons and wantonly pointing a fire-arm, Harry W. Walters, went on trial before Judge Calvin S. Boyer.

Walter F. Lewis, 56-year-old Bedminster township farmer, the first witness, testified that the defendant came out of his house in Haycock township and refused to let them go by because an automobile was parked in the driveway.

"I went in and asked the man to move his car to let our lumber teams by. He came out of the house and said the first—who goes by through here I am going to shoot—and drew a revolver out of his blouse. We were on our way to a woodlot."

"You don't know whether the gun was loaded or not?" said counsel for the defendant. "I was too far away to see that," said Lewis.

A 67-year-old farmer, Elmer Johnson who has been a resident of Haycock township practically all his life, testified he was about 15 or 20 feet away from Lewis when the dispute about the driveway took place.

35 tons of lead had to be added to the hull to counterbalance the weight and effect of this superstructure.

The Nautilus left Provincetown, Mass., on June 6, 1931, and headed across the Atlantic for Spitzbergen, Norway. Heavy seas and inability to ride beneath the storm made the Atlantic crossing a nightmare. It soon became apparent that, despite all precautions, the structural changes had tended to make the ship top-heavy. When 140 miles off the Irish coast, rolling in an arc of 47 degrees, and reversing eight times a minute, the Nautilus called for help. The U. S. S. Wyoming responded. It was while efforts were being made to take the Nautilus in tow that Bristol's native son, Frank Crilly, was lost overboard. By an unheard of and never repeated stroke of good fortune, Crilly got back to his ship, thereby gaining the unique distinction of being, thus far, the only known man in the history of the navy of the world, who was lost overboard from a submarine during a storm and recovered alive. The Atlantic crossing took 17 days and left both ship and crew in badly battered condition.

Repaired and replenished at Spitzbergen, the Nautilus set forth on its real mission—to reach the North Pole, to gather scientific data, including data on the possibility of establishing a meteorological station permanently at the North Pole, and to test the practicability of undsea craft for polar exploration.

The voyage toward the Pole proceeded without mishap or unusual difficulty. The various ice drills were used successfully, with Frank Crilly as the first man aloft. Open leas frequently made it unnecessary to use the drills or to sail under the ice. About 400 miles from the Pole, however, the open leas ended, and the ice layer appeared to stretch on indefinitely. Due to the excessive weight forward, occasioned particularly by the large drill, the ship had begun to leak badly, and it was deemed inadvisable to proceed.

Although the Nautilus failed to reach its ultimate objective, Officer Riggs pointed out that much had in fact been accomplished. It was definitely established, for example, that there are four distinct temperature strata in the waters of the Arctic regions, and that the Gulf Stream disappears or terminates this side of the North Pole. Soundings showed depths of nine miles at various places in the Arctic Ocean, confirming conclusions previously indicated by the marked decrease in gravity which other polar explorers had observed. Curiously enough, summer temperatures in the north polar regions vary from about 8 degrees below zero to about 14 degrees above, which makes the Arctic appear rather warm in comparison with Bristol's February temperatures. The expedition also discovered that, contrary to popular belief, the Arctic waters abound with all sorts of marine life. Other data gathered, said Officer Riggs, have convinced Sir Hubert Wilkins as we think it is, but instead, that it comes in cycles of about 18 years length, and that with proper meteorological equipment in a permanent station at the North Pole it will be possible to predict weather conditions accurately two years in advance. Finally, even though the Nautilus eventually proved unseaworthy, Officer Riggs was of the opinion that the use of undsea craft properly designed from the beginning for polar exploration is not only possible, but very practical.

Officer Riggs' talk followed a business meeting at which arrangements for the Second Annual Card Party of the Mothers' and Fathers' Associations, to be held this evening in the high school auditorium, were completed. The announcement that a gymnastics class has been organized to meet once a week under the direction of Coach William E. Dougherty, was greeted with universal approval and satisfaction. Members interested should report at the high school gymnasium on Monday evening. It was also announced that at the meeting in March there will be the annual exhibition by the gymnasium teams of the school. Plans for a supper meeting, with special entertainment, to be held in April or May, were also discussed and a committee appointed to report at the meeting in March.

Withdraw Aid To Let

failed, it was made clear, his services would be welcome no longer. Those close to the defense said then he would be in the case only about 24 hours longer.

Leibowitz had his chance yesterday afternoon. He went into the death house at a favorable psychological moment—when Hauptmann was informed the new date for his electrocution had been set for the week of March 30. The attorney carried Governor Hoffman's full authority to tell the prisoner that there was no further hope for him unless he "came clean."

The lawyer, accompanied by Fisher, went into the death house at two p. m. There followed one of the most bizarre scenes ever enacted in any prison. There for four and one-half hours the nation's most publicized criminal lawyer of the day engaged in a life-and-death battle of wits with the world's most notorious criminal.

Cajoling and threatening by turns, Leibowitz used every psychological trap, every trick in his bag to make the lynx-eyed prisoner confess the truth. He pointed to the death chamber door, two feet from Hauptmann's cell and promised:

"You'll go in there next month, grandchildren."

Mrs. Hannah E. Owen (nee Faunce), widow of Josiah M. Owen, for many years president of Bristol Borough Council, died this morning at 1:30 o'clock at her residence, 335 Lafayette street. She had been seriously ill for the past week.

Mrs. Owen was a native of Philadelphia but had made her home here for about 55 years. She was a member of Shepherds Delight Lodge, No. 1, Shepherds of Bethlehem.

The survivors are Miss Clara Owen, Mrs. Camilla S. Fenton and Mrs. Minerva Epstein, her daughters, all of Bristol.

Funeral service will be conducted Monday at 2:30 from the late residence of the deceased. Burial in Bristol Cemetery will be in charge of the H. S. Rue Estate, funeral directors.

Mrs. Mary Ellen Scull, widow of W. Franklin Scull, died at the home of her son, William F. Scull, 638 Spruce street, late last night. She had been in ill health for some time.

Mrs. Martha Ellis, and Mrs. John Arrison, Bristol, sisters of Mrs. Scull, survive; as does also her son, and six grandchildren.

Richard, if you don't tell us the truth. We cannot help you any longer. You must help yourself or die."

Fisher stood by, saying little, but confirming the assertion that there was little hope left.

Leibowitz could see the electric chair inside through a peep-hole in the door. The ugly, black throne of death was covered with a sheet.

But the resilient Hauptmann droned on and on with explanations and protests of innocence. He even gave his version of how the crime took place.

"I think somebody got next to some of the women in the (Lindbergh) house," he said. "The baby was handed out the door. Maybe the ladder was used, but I think it was for emergency only. The death was an accident."

Leibowitz gave up at 6:30. Haggard, worn and baffled, he acknowledged defeat. As he left Hauptmann blandly inquired:

"Is there maybe something else I can answer for you, Mr. Leibowitz? Maybe you can come back."

After the weary attorney had gone, Hauptmann, still fresh and unruffled, sat down and penned a new challenge to Dr. John F. "Jafsie" Condon, the State's star witness against him at his trial. He addressed the note to Col. Mark O. Kimberling, principal keeper of the State Prison. It said:

"I will be very pleased if I could have the opportunity of speaking with Dr. Condon. I feel I could prove to him I am not the man he dealt with. (Signed) Richard Hauptmann."

He gave another note to Kimberling saying:

"Please admit Samuel Leibowitz to see me whenever he comes."

TWO IMPORTANT GAMES SCHEDULED FOR TONIGHT

The games which will have a large bearing on the outcome of the second half of the Bristol Amateur League will be played tonight as the Third Ward Rangers and the Moose clash in the second tilt on the Italian Mutual Aid floor. In the opening game the Hibernians will play St. Ann's.

Both the Rangers and Moose are undefeated. The Moose have captured four straight frays and the Rangers are close behind with three straight. The Warders are greatly strengthened by Tommy Morrissey and Lou Parker who work in conjunction with Pete Borneice. Bud Tullio and Henry Morgan. The McGilghey men have Ernie Birchenough and Mintie Maczak, who are in the lineup with those other scoring aces, Joe Roe, Herbie Lawrence and Eddie Dugan.

Spectators are unneeded as to which is the better club, both teams having their staunch rooters. The Moose is a high-scoring outfit, while the Rangers excel in defensive work.

The St. Ann's team will attempt to make it two straight against the team of Marty Fallon. The Saints won last week against the Y. M. A. in an extra period game. The ribs have dropped three straight.

First game will start at eight o'clock sharp.

O'MAHONEY PINS RUDY DUSEK IN MATCH

TRENTON, N. J., Feb. 20.—Trenton's Hibernians and an assorted crowd of nut addicts went away from the Armory singing the praises of Danno O'Mahoney last night after the undefeated champion from the old sod pinned Rudy Dusek of the Omaha Duseks, in 2 1/2 minutes.

Danno tossed his rowdy opponent across the ring several times, battered him with two hefty forearms and then dropped on him for the fall. It was all very simple for the champion. In fact, he had a harder time pushing his way to the dressing room through the crowd that wanted his autograph than he did in subduing Dusek. Danno weighed 226, while Dusek was a pound lighter. About 3,000 persons saw the bout.

In winning last night O'Mahoney clearly showed that he is an improved and masterful wrestler. Those persons who went to the bout with the thought of seeing the customary dramatics might have been disappointed, but those persons who went to see a champion in action saw just that.

Quick as a steel trap and deliberate

To be a success in the field of sport an athlete must be in perfect condition . . . he or she must be willing to sacrifice many of the pleasures, so-called, in order to attain that much desired perfection . . . a rigid course of training must be followed and should be prescribed by a trainer, who knows his business.

When we watched the boxing bouts in the Mutual Aid Hall on Monday night . . . we couldn't help noting the perfect condition the boys from the Bageri Club were in . . . each lad was trained down perfectly . . . excellent co-ordination in timing their blows . . . with that extra bit of energy when the crisis came to beat his opponent.

On the other hand the local boys were in very poor physical shape . . . almost every one carried that tell-tale waist-line so detrimental to success in a boxing match . . . now we are not taking a fling at the trainers of the locals . . . because we understand that they try very hard to get the boys out for gym practice . . . but the boys seem to take their training entirely too lightly.

It was too bad that Sammy Balocchi was knocked out by Frankie Tomaselli . . . Young Balocchi who hasn't battled in the ring for months was unfortunate in meeting an ex-champion of the Philadelphia district in his come-back attempt . . . we hope that the youngster will not take his defeat too seriously . . . but get down to the gym and train just that much harder . . . Sammy knows how to punch and with more experience should go far in the squared circle.

An old Bristol favorite, Harry Graber, the East Side Club red head, battled his way into the finals in the lightweight class on Monday night in the inter-city tournament held in Madison Square Garden, New York City. Only to lose a thrilling battle by points to George Cooper, of Yorkville, N. Y.

Another scrapper who has appeared at the St. Ann's Club in several bouts who went into the finals of his class in the same tournament, only to go down in defeat, was Al Pierce, the colored dash from the Wharton Club. The only local entry in the New York tournament, Harry Davis, promising light-heavyweight, received a badly cut eye in the first round of his bout, forcing the fight to be stopped, therefore losing by a technical knockout.

Bill Fine, the ex-Phillies' pitcher, is training hard to be in shape for the coming baseball season. Bill, who now makes his home in Sudbury, Ontario, Canada, expects to pitch for that town in the Northern League again this year. Since the close of last season, Fine has married a Canadian girl and is working for the Ontario Mine Company of Sudbury.

Larry David, of Wilson avenue, who played second base for Smith Falls in the same league as Fine, expects to hook up with a Pennsylvania-New York League team this season. Young David, who is spending a few months up in Ogdensburg, N. Y., expects to be back in a week or so . . . a great prospect for some manager.

Turf's Champion of Champions

By BURNLEY

Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, one of the youngest owners of racing stables, is the present king of the turf, and all due to his great champion Discovery.

Mrs. Isabel Dodge Sloan, who was the acknowledged turf queen when her horse Cavalade was mowing down all opposition in 1934, is now somewhat out of the racing picture, though "Whistlin' Bob" Smith is still trying to groom the injured Cavalade for a successful come-back.

Young Vanderbilt's record-breaking equine marvel is scheduled at this writing to take a crack at the fabulously rich Santa Anita handicap, which carries a purse of some 100,000 smackers.

That is a lot of cabbage anyway you look at it, and if the big red boss can win this bag of oats it will boost his earnings so much that he will be right up at the top with the money champ of all time, Sun Beau.

Discovery was unquestionably the standout horse of 1935, with several record-breaking races to his credit, and a winning streak of seven straight triumphs in spite of heart-breaking weight imposts. If he goes at Santa Anita, he will carry 120 pounds, which, although top weight, is merely a trifle to this handson champion.

Many smart horsemen figure the Vanderbilt ace a copper-riveted, air-tight clinch to win the heavy sugar under these conditions, but don't forget, the race has to be run before you can collect any bets on Discovery.

In his actions, Danno went about the business of pinning Dusek in the manner of a New York, in 22:54. Previously, Able Coleman, 205, of New York, had drop-kicked Joe Coffield, 206, of Kansas City into submission, and Ed Meske, 220, Ohio, had defeated Ted Morgan, Texas, 277, in 17:15.
